Bennett and Van Horne, of Utah, prepared the argument. The was subdivided, Van Horne and Bennett taking the second and third parts, while I was detailed to prepare the first part relating to the principles of resadjudicata and state decisis. I dictated that part and handed it over to Mr. Bennim.

I saw of the record until it came out in print.

"I did not sign my name to any paper in connection with the matter, as attorney or otherwise, nor did I tell anyone else to sign for me. Messrs. Bennett and Van Horne, knowing the work done by me, doubtless felt generously inclined to give me credit, and with the best of motives inadvertently placed me as one of the signers of the argument which I had helped to prepare, and affixed the word 'attorney' instead of 'delegate.' When the books were printed it was too late to correct, save to explain to the secretary.

It is to be hoped the treasury departpartment will be brought to a realization of the fact that until congress shall see fit to remove the duty from lead ore and lead it is not for executive officers to consider the law as of no effect. While the duty is legal it should be collected.

NOT SNOBBISHNESS.

The St Paul Globe characterizes the action of Minister Reid in renting a house in Paris at $20,000 a year as an exhibition of snobbishness. The generality of people will take a different view of the subject, which after all is of chief concern to Mr. Reid and of very little to the rest of the world. Mr. Reid is a man of ample means, having been successful in business and in matrimony, and if he chooses to spend his money lavishly while residing abroad as a representative of this government, it is all the better for the credit of the United States, which does not pay its diplomates enough to enable them to live in a style equal to that which other first-class governments require of their diplomates. Mr. Reid will probably have not much better quarters in Paris than he has been residing in New York, and possibly it never entered his mind that he should spend no more in Paris than his salary as minister amounts to. A first-class mission is not a position that a man in as minister amounts to.
